The present study is a result of an inspiration from my experiences of teaching and learning English Language. An attempt was hence made by the researcher to contribute to English Language Teaching. My efforts to carry out the study have always sought continuous support from the Department of Education both morally and academically, and from the UGC financially.

I am deeply grateful to my guide Dr. Dipti Oza who with her unique insight in research continuously enlightened my path though she was not much familiar with the content (ELT) of the present research.

My sincere gratitude to the Head of the Department, Prof. S.C. Panigrahi and the Dean of the Faculty of Education and Psychology, Prof. R.C. Patel and all the former Heads and Deans who facilitated me for the research work.

My earnest thanks to the experts who devoted their precious time to examine my tools and programmes and made valuable suggestions to refine and filter them.

School authorities, who generously permitted me to carry out pilot work and to collect data in their schools for my work, also deserve my salute.

I feel indebted to my all friends who have always stood by me, be it academic work or non-academic work, simply defies description.

I must acknowledge all direct and indirect helps form all other various persons and resources.

Last but not least, my affectionate parents Rohitbhai and Shakuntlaben and my caring wife Sunita who were always there to lend their hands when I needed the most, and particularly the Almighty, who always kept my hope alive.

I devote the credit of the success of the study to my late friend Vinesh, without his help I might have not completed the study.
